

Tough Love

“Spare the rod and spoil the child” is all too true. Not only at home but in the school, discipline must be clearly, consistently, and conscientiously enforced. A spanking is often the only way to get a child’s attention of the one being punished but all of his playmates as well. Of course we are not speaking of brutal, crippling violence. But corporal punishment, properly applied, does no permanent physical damage to all – it is hardly more than a tap or a slap; but the permanent, beneficial influence on the psychology of the young is beyond estimate. Anyone who wants to take this excellent tool away from teachers, let alone parents, is suffering from some delusion if he believes that children can become adults without discipline.
