

Skill Builders: Writing – Academic Writing

Academic Writing

We call it writing to learn and learning to write.

Academic writing is the type of writing students are expected to produce in response to content they learn about in an academic setting; i.e. school. The standard for good academic writing is how logical or reasonable the writer's thinking is – is the author's opinion based in evidence that is credible and convincing? As such, academic writing is a window into one's intellectual life—and that's why it's such an important skill to focus on. Not only does writing show us what a child is thinking; but the process of writing helps develop your child's thinking.
