

North Korea Hiring English Teachers

Reading

North Korea is working on expanding tourism. To do this, it plans on hiring a handful of English language teachers from abroad. The teachers will work with tour guides at a tourism college. Even though these are short-term voluntary positions, many curious teachers are already showing interest. Instead of receiving a salary, each teacher will have to pay approximately $1,000 to cover travel costs. The teachers who are selected will have strict travel regulations, and will be monitored very closely. Currently, only a limited number of visitors are allowed into North Korea as part of a closely guided tour.
