

Doing The Right Thing

Mon, Sep 16, BOSTON (Reuters) - A Boston homeless man turned over to police a backpack stuffed with nearly $42,000 worth of cash and travelers checks shortly after he found it at a shopping mall, police said on Monday.

“The Good Samaritan could only provide officers with his name and the address of the shelter where he currently lives,” according to a police press release.

The man, identified by police as Glen James, found the bag Saturday evening at the South Bay Mall in the Boston neighborhood of Dorchester. He gave it to police who were passing, who [quickly] found the owner - a Chinese national whose passport was also in the bag, police said. The owner’s name was not released.
