Reading

The world changes so quickly that it's hard to keep up. Inventions and innovations alter the way we live. People's values, attitudes, and beliefs keep changing. And the pace of change keeps accelerating, making it difficult to prepare for tomorrow. No one knows exactly what will happen in the future. But by considering what might happen, people can more rationally decide on the sort of future that would be most desirable. The future doesn't just happen; people create it through their action or inaction today. Opportunity as well as danger lies ahead, so people need to make far-sighted decisions. The process of change is inevitable; it's up to you to make sure that the change is constructive.
