

Money

Money is often said to be the permanent source of malice for human beings. We see many people who have become slaves of money. They think money is everything, and that they can do anything if they have enough money. They also claim money defines our social status. Others think that's not true, even though they agree money is an important part of life. But serious problems arise when people don't know how to spend money. Our parents say making money is easier than spending it, and they are afraid that "almighty" money may have bad effects on our character. It is certainly true that spending money wisely requires a lot of practice.
