

Robber with perfect manners

Good manners cost nothing as the saying goes, in fact they netted Gregory Hess $3000 and the title of the World's Politest Armed Robber. One Saturday morning in February 2011, the 65-year-old entered a Shell petrol station in Seattle and bought a cup of coffee. Then he pulled a gun out of his pocket and calmly asked the man behind the counter to empty the cash register. John Henry says he's been robbed four times in the five years he has owned the Shell station but never by someone as well-mannered as the man that walked into his convenience store. Despite the weapon, Mr. Henry insists that Hess remained as polite as possible throughout, even apologising before he fled with the money. The strange robbery scene was captured on the petrol station's CCTV footage and has been posted on the internet - giving Hess a cult following and the police hard evidence which led to Mr Hess's arrest the following Monday.
